IDAHO WINE — ITS TIME HAS COME

Known for its breathtaking wilderness and, perhaps more famously, for its potatoes, Idaho is also home to a fast-growing wine industry and some fantastic wines. Nestled between the Rocky Mountains and the Snake River, Idaho wine regions nurture the grapes with a moderate climate, limited precipitation, and a consistent growing season that adds complexity to the grapes. Idaho is known for growing and producing classic varieties including Cabernet Sauvignon, Merlot, Riesling and Chardonnay, as well as more adventurous wines such as Tempranillo and Sangiovese.

IDAHO WINE HISTORY

IDAHO WINE, 150 YEARS IN THE MAKING

Idaho is considered, by some, part of the new frontier of wine-growing areas in the United States. However, some of the first grapes planted in the Pacific Northwest were actually grown in Lewiston in the 1860's. Two Frenchman, Louis offer ideal growing conditions. The characteristically cold winters allow vines to go dormant gradually, while ridding the plants of bugs and discouraging disease. A combination of cold nights and hot days serves to balance acids and sugars. With the

“ It is the wine that leads me on...” - Homer, The Odyssey

Desol and Robert Schleicher, and one German, Jacob Schaefer were winning awards around the country, before prohibition took a debilitating toll on the industry and brought production to an absolute halt.

National Prohibition, which followed State Prohibition in 1916 and lasted until 1933, took its toll on the wine regions, growers and winemakers. It wasn't until 1970 that wine grapes were again planted in Idaho, this time along the Snake River Valley in the southern part of the state. It was in the Snake River Valley that Idaho's first American Viticulture Area (AVA) was approved in April 2007. The immense size of this AVA is a great advantage, allowing for tremendous growth.

From a purely geographical standpoint, area vintners insist both Northern and Southern Idaho temperature variations typical of this higher elevation, sugars remain high. Natural acids, important for the wine's taste and longevity, are maintained at favorable levels by comparatively cool evenings. The limited amount of rainfall allows growers to control water through irrigation.

The Idaho wine industry has been a steadily growing community for the last 30 years, with remarkable growth in the past decade. With 11 wineries in 2002, Idaho is now home to over 50, with more than 1,300 acres of grapes. To see the impact the industry is having, the Idaho Wine Commission worked with Stonebridge Research Group to create an economic impact study. The results were startling. It was concluded that the Idaho wine industry had a $169.3 million-dollar impact in 2013, creating nearly 1,226 jobs. This growth has led to an increase in visibility, more tourism, an enhanced reputation and has created tremendous opportunity for expansion.

The Idaho wine industry is just in its infancy and is expected to see remarkable growth in the next 15 years.

IDAHO WINE GROWTH

The first Idaho winery to open after prohibition was Ste. Chapelle in 1975.

"I am ready, willing, and able to taste more of them."

- Ted Loos, Wine + Spirits Contributor, Travel + Leisure

"I am bullish on Idaho, and I am not alone."

- W. Blake Gray, The Gray Report

"Wine industry folks in Idaho don't take themselves too seriously. Yet Idaho wineries, which produce more than 200,000 cases a year, make serious wines."

- Angel Antin, Contributing Wine Writer, Market Watch Magazine

SNAKE RIVER VALLEY

AMERICAN VITICULTURAL AREA

Approved in April 2007, the Snake River Valley was Idaho's first designated American Viticultural Area (AVA). The AVA is located in Southwestern Idaho and features the largest density of vineyards and wineries in the state. The area encompasses more than 8,000 square miles at latitudes comparable to many famous wine regions around the world (43°-46°). Formed more than four million years ago, the Snake River overlays the ancient Lake Idaho bed, which creates its natural boundaries. The result is a distinctive grape-growing region whose ancient volcanic sediment has bestowed fertile, well-draining soils that give growers better control throughout the grape-growing process. More importantly, this soil contributes to a unique terroir that—in the hands of talented winemakers—consistently delivers premium wines that are as memorable as they are delicious.

LEWIS-CLARK VALLEY

AMERICAN VITICULTURAL AREA

Approved in April 2016, the Lewis-Clark Valley is renowned for its temperate climate within the colder surrounding regions, producing high-quality fruit. Formed by the Snake and Clearwater rivers, this valley currently grows 25 varieties of red and white wine grapes, and is home to over 16 vineyards on more than 80 acres with four Idaho wineries.

EAGLE FOOTHILLS

AMERICAN VITICULTURAL AREA

The Eagle Foothills American Viticultural Area was approved in November 2015. This sub-AVA of the larger Snake River Valley AVA is the only one located completely within the state of Idaho. Nestled in the foothills north of Eagle, Idaho, the slope and aspect of the Eagle Foothills play an important role in sunlight reception, cold air drainage and frost and wind protection.

Soil

The soil in this region is sedimentary bedrock from ancient Lake Idaho and the nearby granitic mountains. Soils consist of sand, silt and clay that are well drained and rich in mineral grains.

Climate

The cool temperatures, short growing season and low growing degree days allow for successful ripening of early to mid-season grape varieties, with low acidity levels. Hot days and cool nights balance acid levels. The annual precipitation varies between 11"-18" averaging 2,418 growing degree days annually.

Water

Directly below the Snake River aquifer, which is one of the most productive aquifers in the US. The proximity to water gives Idaho potential to have sustainable vineyards for generations to come.
